

Switzerland and the US: Spring or Stormy Period?

Dear members and friends,

The relationship between our two countries is currently in a delicate phase. Are we at the next stage of a great development or do we stand at the beginning of a stormy phase?

The good news is evident: Business between our countries has never been better! If we look at a 2-years period from 2011 to 2013, Swiss exports to the USA have grown 19%. This compares favorably with exports to the EU (-1.7%), Germany (-5.1%), France (-2.1%), Italy (-7.1%) or the BRIC countries (-3.5%). Imports from the USA have in that period of time increased by more than 25%. Foreign direct investment has been very positive in both directions. These are all signs of a healthy and bustling relationship!

We all know –and get reminded often - that there is one big issue overshadowing this great relationship: the legacy issue regarding the banking confidentiality (viewed from the Swiss side) or the assistance of tax evasion (viewed from the US side). Since last summer, the so-called US Program seems to resolve the issue through a controlled process, albeit a bitter process for many banks involved.

With the famous Levin/McCain hearing of March 5, this issue has picked up some unpleasant steam. Rumors about potential indictments, necessary guilty pleas by banks and pressure on Swiss bankers to reveal client names have been rampant. In many instances, they seem to have been intentionally started to put undue pressure on Swiss banks. And where there is smoke, there normally is fire.

At the time of writing (May 5), the risk of the legacy issue escalating seems greater than ever in the last 5 years. The Chamber calls on all participants to seek constructive solutions according to the US Program. Only this can lead to a solution acceptable to both partners and prevent endangering the great and mutually beneficial relationship.

With these hopeful thoughts, I wish you a great spring time.

Donald S. Beyer running for Congress

Don Beyer, US Ambassador in Switzerland 2009-2013, is running for Congress in Virginia's 8th congressional district in Northern Virginia. In his time in Switzerland, Don was a very active and effective Ambassador touring all parts of Switzerland and connecting with all segments of population. He and his wife Megan were great hosts and kept the door to their residence open through the whole period. We all got to know Don as a great communicator, a well-balanced representative of US interest and a great friend of Switzerland.

Don Beyer would be a great addition to the House of Representatives: Great for Virginia and the USA with his balanced views and his great ability to find common ground between different views and between the two parties – a rare skill in a highly polarized political environment. But Don would also be great for Switzerland with his deep knowledge of the relationship between the two countries and his great empathy for Switzerland.

We keep our fingers crossed for Don's success. Pls. find out more at <http://friendsofdonbeyer.com>. US citizen can help with a financial contribution while Swiss citizen can only support him through their good thoughts.

Mass Immigration Initiative: A multidimensional distribution fight

After the Feb 9 vote on so-called „Mass Immigration“, the distribution fight for quotas has started long before the tough issues with the EU are resolved. The fight will be multi-dimensional: High-value versus low-value jobs, EU versus non-EU and every canton for itself. Politically well represented segments have called for a priority for low value jobs that Swiss workers are not willing to take on (health care, tourism, construction, agriculture etc.) while others propose a sort of auction to select the highest value jobs. Certain people propose that immigration quotas be given to EU members first and to non-EU citizens only if there are available quota, to be adjusted on a yearly basis.

For our members, however, it will be crucial that high value immigrants like scientists, engineers and managers can be hired in Switzerland, and that quotas for citizen of all nationalities be allotted with long-term planning security. We believe this also to be crucial for the Swiss economy and will thus fight for these priorities.

Chilly winter denting US first-quarter growth

A very cold winter likely put a brake on the US economy in the first quarter, but growth fundamentals remain strong and signs of an acceleration have already emerged. Gross domestic product probably grew at a 1.2 percent annual rate, according to a survey of economists. In addition to the weather, the economy was lumbered by weak exports and a slowing pace of restocking by businesses. While growth appears to have pulled back sharply from the fourth-quarter's 2.6 percent pace, investors and Federal Reserve officials are likely to shrug off the slowdown and focus on recent data indicating strength at the tail end of the quarter. The unusually cold and snowy winter may have sliced off as much as 1.4 percentage points from GDP growth. Despite the anticipated growth slowdown, the economy's fundamentals likely remained solid.

Raising fees for banks planned

The US Office of the Comptroller of the Currency proposed in late April to raise fees banks have to pay to fund the agency, as the regulatory burden increases after the crisis. The OCC said it had published a so-called notice of proposed rulemaking, requesting comments from the industry. The so-called marginal assessment rate for banks with more than USD 40 billion in assets would increase by 14.5 percent from September 30, 2014, the OCC said.

US Treasury expects to pay down debt in April-June quarter

The US Treasury recently announced that it expects to pay down USD 78 billion in net marketable debt in the April-June quarter, a sign the improving economy is reducing the federal budget deficit. Washington is still on track to run roughly a half trillion dollars into the red this year. While that is high by historical standards, annual deficits have fallen precipitously in recent years as the economy recovered from a deep recession. The Congressional Budget Office projects budget deficits will widen slightly relative to national economic output over most of the current decade's remaining years.

US as "rising star" of global manufacturing

A new ranking of the competitiveness of the world's top 25 exporting countries says the United States of America is once again a "rising star" of global manufacturing thanks to falling domestic natural gas prices, rising worker productivity and a lack of upward wage pressure. The report, released in late April by The Boston Consulting Group (BCG), found that while China remains the world's No. 1 country in terms of manufacturing competitiveness, its position is "under pressure" as a result of rising labor and transportation costs and lagging productivity growth. The US, meanwhile, which has lost nearly 7.5 million industrial jobs since employment in the sector peaked in 1979 as manufacturers shipped production to low-cost countries, is no No. 2 in terms of overall competitiveness, BCG said. The biggest factor driving the US rebound is, according to the report, the cheap natural gas prices, which have tumbled 50 percent over the last decade as a result of the shale gas revolution.

New home sales hint at prolonged housing weakness

Sales of new US single-family homes fell to their lowest level in eight months in March, dashing hopes for a quick turnaround for a sector that fell into a soft patch last summer. The Commerce Department said in April that sales dropped 14.5 percent to seasonally adjusted annual rate of 384,000 units. It was the second consecutive monthly decline and the biggest since July, which was also the last time sales were so slow. Sales were down 13.3 percent from a year ago, marking the largest year-on-year decline since April 2011. Economists, who had expected sales to increase, said the drop suggested some fundamental weakness in the market, although unusually cold weather had also dampened activity. March's weak sales pace pushed the month's supply of houses on the market to 6.0, the highest level since October 2011.

Leading economic indicators up in March

A gauge of future US economic activity rose in March, pointing to a pick-up in growth in the months ahead. The Conference Board said in mid-April that its Leading Economic Index increased 0.8 percent to 100.9 last month. Economists had expected the index to gain 0.7 percent.

Jobless rate still good gauge of slack

The US jobless rate in recent years has been a good gauge of slack in the economy, according to a paper published in April by the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco that takes aim at critics who have argued otherwise. The unemployment rate has responded to GDP growth since the financial crisis in essentially the same way that it has in every recession since the 1970s, the paper's authors found, rising when economic output slows, and falling when it speeds up. Figuring out the exact extent of slack in the economy is one of the most pressing questions for monetary policymakers, Fed Chair Janet Yellen has said. If policymakers underestimate it, they might miss the chance to give the economy the extra juice it needs. If they overestimate it, they could end up over-stimulating the economy and sparking inflation. As policymakers have noted throughout the recession, the unemployment rate has given confusing signals.

Wages in private sector see a growing gap

The highest wages paid in the Swiss private sector increased 50% more than the lowest wages between 2002 and 2012, according to figures released by end of April by the Federal Statistical Office. The worst paid 10% of workers earned less than CHF 3,886 gross per month of full-time work in 2012, an increase of 9.5% over the 10-year period. In comparison, the highest-paid workers earned an average of CHF 11,512 per month, an increase of 22.5%. Wages in the private sector varied greatly by branch, with bankers earning an average of CHF 9,823 per month, whereas e.g. workers in gastronomy earned CHF 4,727 per month. In 2012, there were around 268,000 low-wage full-time equivalent positions in the private sector. Of 339,000 people holding these positions, almost 67% were women. The wage structure survey is conducted once every two years. For 2012, information was collected from almost 35,000 private sector companies with a total of 1.5 million employees.

Firms fear vote impact on recruiting

Half of Swiss companies expect the recent vote to restrict the inflow of European Union workers to have a negative impact on their ability to fill jobs, according to a survey. At the same time, 36% of professions are experiencing a talent shortfall. The government has three years to come up with a way of implementing February's immigration vote, but firms are already beginning to second guess the potential measures and work out what impact it could have on their business. A survey by UBS found that half of the 400 enterprises they polled predicted future problems for meeting their employment requirements. This would particularly affect cantons Zurich, Geneva and Vaud that currently absorb 45% of foreign workers. The employment market fears highlighted by UBS were largely echoed by the executive headhunting firm Egon Zehnder in March. UBS recommends that Switzerland does more to integrate women and older people into the work force. Switzerland has one of the lowest full-time employment rates for women (41%) among developed countries. The State Secretariat for Economic Affairs (seco) also recently published figures that revealed that more than a third of professions lacked enough qualified workers to fill vacancies in Switzerland. The government is teaming up with the cantons and social partners to boost the hiring potential of the domestic workforce, seco said.

Nestlé becomes global top three consumer company

Nestlé, the world's largest food company, has moved into the top three of a worldwide ranking of consumer product companies, according to a report compiled by Deloitte. The seventh annual "Global Powers of Consumer Products" report, which ranks consumer products companies by their 2012 sales, put Samsung of South Korea first, followed by US corporation Apple. Both companies benefited as demand for electronic products rebounded. Deloitte also said it expects merger and acquisition transaction to pick up in 2014 as concerns over economic uncertainty begin to recede. Improved credit availability, low interest rates, improved capital markets and "sizable" cash reserves would drive deals, according to Deloitte. Vevey-based Nestlé, the largest consumer products company in Europe increased sales 10% to CHF 92.2 billion in 2012, boosted by the USD 11.9 billion acquisition of a nutrition business from Pfizer. Nestlé moved ahead of Japan's Panasonic, whose sales declined 6.9% in 2012. Other Swiss companies in the Top 250 are watchmakers Swatch Group, which finished in position 95, and Rolex on 151st place, as well as dairy company Emmi ranked 237. Swatch ranks fifth and Rolex ninth in the watch manufacturing sector.

Part-time working continues to rise

Working part-time is becoming increasingly popular in Switzerland, particularly among men. This makes the country second only to the Netherlands in Europe in terms of people working less than 100%. Between 2003 and 2013, the increase in the number of people working part-time was more than three times greater than those working full-time (24.5% compared with 7.1%). Overall the working population grew by 12.6%, noted the Federal Statistics Office in its Swiss Labour Force Survey 2013. According to the statistical standards used in Switzerland, people working at 90% are considered full-time workers. In the fourth quarter of 2013, the statistics office reported that slightly more of employed persons worked 50%-89% compared with under 50%. There has been an increase in fathers working part-time. Women still lead the way, with 80.2% of women living in a household with children under 15 opting to do so - a percentage that has remained stable over the last decade.

Weatherford move highlights Swiss problems

Switzerland's status as a corporate tax location has been dealt a fresh blow by the decision of oil giant Weatherford International to incorporate its headquarters in Ireland. According to a recent tax study, Switzerland's boom years may be over. Low Swiss cantonal tax rates have proved a magnet for multinational firms in the past few decades. But international pressure to reform tax practices, combined with a perceived Swiss intolerance of foreigners, have recently tarnished the reputation of "Location Switzerland". The firm will retain its tax domicile in Zug but told shareholders that the recent Swiss votes to limit executive pay and to limit the number of European Union workers crossing borders had created uncertainty.
